Note by the President & CEO Arabia CSR Network

Habiba Al Mar'ashi

Greetings from Arabia CSR network!

Today, CSR is being realized as a core of any business strategy, as well managed CSR and sustainability programmes generate real and long-term values for institutions. For countries in the Arab Region, CSR too is becoming a topic of great interest among business leaders and government officials in the region, but there is still a need to cultivate a deeper understanding of CSR and its implications.

With the goal of capacitating companies to optimize the potential of their CSR initiatives and nurture CSR leadership in the region, the Arabia CSR Network is dedicatedly implementing programs that help organizations to identify specific issues and enable them to spearhead cost-effective solutions and leverage their core competencies.

In the month of March, Arabia CSR Network held a Press Conference and launch of the Seventh Cycle of the Arabia CSR Awards (ACSRA) and the Forum 2014. We have high hopes for this cycle as more and more organizations in the region realize the need and importance of implementing Corporate Social Responsibility, integrating sustainability into their core business strategies and contributing to the sustainable development of our region can create infinite opportunities for innovation and co-creation of benefits. ACSRA not only provides a learning curve for the organizations but also showcases the work being undertaken by the organizations in the region at the national, regional and international platform. The Forum for 2014 will be held on 26th October under the theme of "Green and Inclusive Economy: Building a Sustainable Future. I urge all the organizations in the region – small, medium, large, private or Government to apply and join the Awards Cycle. An Awards Clinic is being organised on 21st April to facilitate the applicants with the process of application and sharing of judges expectations, challenges and success stories of the past winners. I hope organizations will take advantage of this supporting clinic.

To help companies improve their CSR performance, ACSRN organises a range of trainings. Training on Fundamentals of CSR was organised in the Month of March. More trainings are planned for the coming months that include GRI Sustainability Reporting Training in April and Training on Budgeting and Implementation of CSR in May. I hope to see organizations make the most out of these trainings to streamline and strengthen their CSR initiatives.

ACSRN conducted Training on Fundamentals of CSR, Dubai, UAE

The Arabia CSR Network organised a two-day training "Fundamentals of CSR" on 19th - 20th March 2014 for CSR practitioners to understand how they can drive business value by investing in CSR and Sustainability. The objective of the training was also to prove that CSR and responsible business practices should not be seen as an exclusive privilege of large and multi-national organizations, but a necessary investment for organizations of all sizes and from all sectors.

The training conducted by the International faculty with more than two decades of CSR expertise had participants from diverse organizations and sectors ranging from Hospitality, Chemicals Industry, Retail, Services and Consumer Technology amongst others. The training focused on topics such as Triple Bottom Line, Sustainable Value Portfolio, Stakeholder Engagement and Communicating CSR progress.

The training made use of exercises that further elaborated key corporate sustainability topics. The scientifically designed training material helped the participants understand the concept of CSR in a holistic manner and deliberated on importance of creating regional scope of CSR activities, CSR audits, building of CSR Strategies, converging diverse CSR initiatives in to organizational plans. The CSR Fundamentals training is one of the many capacity-building programs that the Network has planned for 2014. ACSRN attends AHK Event on Compliance

The Arabia CSR Network participated in an interesting event titled “Compliance in the Middle East – a customized concept by organizers AHK – the German-Emirati Joint Council for Industry & Commerce, which was held in Dubai on 27th March 2014. Key topics addressed in the event included:

- The legal and regulatory framework and current developments and challenges in GCC-Germany business relations using the example of the UAE
- Early recognition, exposing and prevention of compliance cases in higher risk jurisdictions
- Compliance management
- Case studies from the Region

Delegates heard from three experts about the compliance architecture in the Region, recent developments, the Siemens compliance system, the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act (FCPA) and the Middle East. Several company cases and country examples were discussed to define the existing legal framework with particular reference to corruption and bribery, country-specific particularities and challenges, and initiatives of the local government. The speakers were Dr. Sven Klaiber, Regional Compliance Officer for the ThyssenKrupp Group; Dr. Frank Chudzick, General Counsel for Siemens Middle East and Dr. Florian Amereller, senior partner and founder of Amereller Legal Consultants, a specialist regional practice.

Presenting an outlook on the UAE’s legal system in relation to anti-bribery, the speaker cited the high country ranking (26th out of 177) in the Transparency international Corruption Perception Index 2013, the strong reliance on sponsorship system, common pool of players (government and business linkages), importance of personal relationships, broad public sector and other aspects.

Noteworthy local efforts include the UAE ratifying the United Nations Convention against Corruption (UNCAC) and drafting a law on anti-corruption, Code of Ethics and Professional Conduct for Civil Service launched by Government of Dubai, etc. Siemens explained how driven by a major compliance case in 2006 in Germany the company worked on establishing a strong, top-down compliance management system, which in turn has ensured a top ranking successively in the Dow Jones Sustainability Index. An overview of the compliance business in the Region shed light on current pressures and drivers, best practices, future trends and the case of Iraq.

Regarding compliance in the Middle East and FCPA, the speaker remarked that the compliance business is dominated by US law firms. He noted that compliance and enforcement is extremely selective in the Region. However market forces and historical pressures and decreasing public tolerance for corruption have led to increasing cooperation, enforcement, and preventive rather than defensive programs. The example of Iraq showed that there exists a distinct difference between theory and practice, polarization by sector (for instance high corruption in re-construction cases in which US companies are heavily invested), variation in terms of geography (north and south), and differentiation by clusters clean clusters).

In the case of Siemens, allegations in the biggest bribery case in Germany in 2006 set in motion a series of overhauling measures that subsequently resulted in a robust compliance system and consistent top ranking in the Dow Jones Sustainability Index.

Arabia CSR Network at Dutco Balfour Beatty Sustainability Month Celebrations, Dubai

Arabia CSR Network’s member, Dutco Balfour Beatty LLC organised the Sustainability Month in March 2014. During the month an array of activities to engage their employees towards CSR practices. Mrs Habiba Al Mar’ashi, President / CEO, Arabia CSR Network was invited to deliver a talk on sustainability at the concluding ceremony of the Sustainability month on 30th March 2014. Addressing the top and middle management at DBB, Mrs Mar’ashi highlighted that a sustainable organization is the one that successfully navigates financial, social and environmental risks, obligations and opportunities.

In today’s rapidly changing environment – building a sustainable business is not just an advantage; it is in fact a necessity. Appreciating the efforts made by Dutco Balfour Beatty LLC making them a winner of the Arabia CSR Awards 2013 in the Large Category, she shared examples of best practices from other companies from the region and globally. She stressed upon the need for the organizations to share best practices and learn from each other. During the session, General Manager, Dutco Balfour Beatty LLC was also present and shared his views on the activities conducted during the Sustainability Month. Towards the end of the session, prizes were given out to the winners of the various activities held during the month as a token appreciation and motivation for DBB employees.

Feature Article

Social Media as a Driving Force in Companies' Sustainability Agendas

One of the key learnings of British Petroleum's oil spill was the way the company had badly managed communications, discomfited the public audience, and weakly disclosed on news related to its environmental mess. We have learned, big time, that at times of crisis, companies are obliged to be as open and transparent as possible and expeditiously communicate updates to different stakeholders' impacted.

Until recently, the concept of corporate sustainability and responsibility (CSR) among businesses has revolved around risk mitigation and self-regulation. Today, businesses are evolving from those reactive positions and moving toward more pro-active approaches to disclose on their various social and environmental issues. The rise of social media has caused several changes in the way CSR functions. Feedback through social media is immediate, permanent, and extremely public. It offers new solutions to advance transparency in business practices and has created online spaces where businesses can engage and drive a bigger impact. Today, more sophisticated companies are using social and new media channels to protect their reputation from misinformation, tell their story to target audiences and inspire new ideas and innovation.

When individuals feel strongly bad about a company's performance on social or environmental issues, one small voice can quickly turn into an online campaign, difficult for even the most protected brands to ignore. For this reason, social media has become a driving force in many companies' CSR agendas. It is a powerful communication vehicle that helps in amplifying CSR messages and positions a company as a good corporate citizen.

The dialogue exchanged between customers and companies can be highly beneficial for both sides; it can build and strengthen a sense of community, which is the fundamental purpose of social media. Lots of firms have excelled in this regard by creating active branded social media channels to engage and share information related to their CSR performance; a great example is General Electric Ecomagination's twitter account which was created to be a forum for fresh thinking and online debates related to clean technology and sustainable infrastructure. Another example is Nestlé Creating Shared Value where the company shares updates related to their nutrition, water presentation and rural development program globally. Another great example is CISCO CSR sharing stories about how CISCO and its partners are bringing positive change in the world.

Nike, the global shoe giant, launched an internal social media network called the "We Portal" which evolved to be a worldwide engagement hub, linking Nike's employees around the social and environmental issue that they care about. Via the portal, employees can get their donation matched by Nike, create volunteering teams and earn points for giving and post community-giving opportunities. "We Portal" serves also as a platform to help employees generate ideas on how Nike can be more sustainable and drive a positive impact globally. These brands and many more made their company's CSR efforts extremely personal just by being present and approachable to the people of Twitter and Facebook. I can easily engage with Jeffrey Hogue, Senior Director of Global CSR and Sustainability at McDonalds, to learn more about the environmental impact of his company's iconic French fries or can ask Ramon Arratia, Global sustainability director at Interface Floor, about how environmentally friendly are the raw materials used in the production of my office's carp tiles. I can also engage with Louise Nicholls, Head of Responsible Sourcing and Sustainability at Marks and Spencer, to discuss some initiatives to help offering clothes to needy people in rural areas of my country. It is that easy!

All in the spirit of sharing good news, those companies have a huge opportunity to ride the high wave of CSR through social media, spread the word, amplify their causes and enlarge a powerful network of their supporters. Building a network of supporters over time that aligns with a company's values and actions can definitely help in protecting brands in times of trouble.

More businesses are now diversifying the usage of social media channels and tools to trigger a viral chain reaction of interest around their CSR and sustainability work. One of the best examples is Unilever via its Sustainable Living Plan; producing videos describing their Value Chain Strategy, designing dedicated websites, contributing to blogs and conducting live Twitter chats to promote their product's sustainability plans and overall progress of their sustainability performance.

Academic institutions are also catching up with the trend. Both programmatic and academic initiatives in communicating sustainability are becoming part of the landscape of sustainability programs at many institutions of higher education. Yale University has created Yale Sustainability striving to enhance the culture of sustainability in the university, develop institutional sustainability models and communicate with CSR thought leaders, practitioners and social influencers to ensure a seat at the CSR table.

Leveraging CSR in the social media world can strengthen consumer trust and loyalty, encourage followers to take action and participate, and put a halo over the brand that dives in. It is a practice that keeps developing every day and more and more companies are getting into the pave. However, the management's quality of those online platforms remains to be weak and requires more development in order to generate the needed impact and drive the most effective stakeholders' engagement for a brand.

DEWA (Dubai Electricity & Water Authority)

DEWA's 'Make a Switch Campaign' and 'Earth Hour'

DEWA launched 'Make a Switch' campaign in collaboration with several government departments and businesses. 'Make the Switch' is focused on educating residents on the importance of conserving energy through simple steps such as using energy-efficient light bulbs, unplugging unused appliances and setting the air conditioners to 24 degrees Celsius.

As part of the ongoing commitment to support the global initiative of Earth Hour, Dubai Electricity and Water Authority (DEWA) marked Earth Hour in Dubai on 29th March 2014, at Bay Avenue Park from 8:30 - 9:30pm under the patronage of Shaikh Hamdan bin Mohammed bin Rashid Al Maktoum, Crown Prince of Dubai and Chairman of Dubai Executive Council.

DEWA encouraged all residents of Dubai to participate in the event, organised at Bay Avenue Park from 5- 8:30pm, and also invited them to be part of the Earth Hour walk, which started at 8:30pm. ACSRN's sister organization Emirates Environmental Group participated in the Earth Hour with a big team of volunteers.

Emirates Integrated Telecommunications Company (du)

du becomes first in the region and first telecom globally to release Sustainability Report based on GRI-G4 comprehensive guidelines

In continuation of its commitment to sustainability best practice, du announced the launch of its third annual Sustainability Report, raising the benchmark for sustainability reporting in the region. The Report meets the new Global Reporting Initiative (GRI) G4 Comprehensive guidelines, which were launched in May 2013 in The Netherlands. In doing so, du has become the first in the region and the world's first telecommunications company to adopt this standard.

In parallel, du announced its revised corporate sustainability commitment, marking the company's progressive outlook in line with the sustainability focus for Expo 2020 and the UAE's Vision 2021. du's 2013 Sustainability Report has undergone the Materiality Matters check by GRI, which verifies that at the time of the report's publication, the disclosures that cover the process of identifying material issues and stakeholder engagement were correctly reported on and identified in the report. In this third revision of the commitment, the company shows an evolution towards a business model that proactively integrates a sustainability outlook across all business areas. The revised corporate sustainability commitment is guided by the United Nations Global Compact (UNGC) principles and the GRI reporting framework, amongst others.

Highlights of du's 2013 Sustainability Report include:

- Steady increase in Emiratisation figures; 34% of the company's total workforce and 81% of du's executive management are Emiratis.
- Emphasis on protection of customers and their data through a range of cyber-security technology and services.
- Suite of innovative offerings that create social and environmental value, such as enabling easier communication for UAE's expatriate labour workforce, cloud services for lower costs and increased efficiency and more.
- 209 of du's base transceiver stations use hybrid sources of energy.
- du is one of the first telecommunications companies in the region to have calculated and assessed its carbon footprint.
- Launch of the company's flagship wellness programme, Every Step Counts, to promote healthy living in the UAE.

Sustainable Development Goals update: promising signs for sustainability reporting

The much discussed and debated European Union draft proposal for a directive on the disclosure of non-financial and diversity information for large companies looks increasingly likely to be adopted having passed another important stage in the legislative process. The proposal is wide-ranging and would drive sustainability reporting across all 28 states that make up the European Union, the largest economic area in the world. Public interest companies – i.e. listed companies with more than 500 employees, together with banks, insurance undertakings and any other such entities that individual member states choose to include – would be required to report on environmental, social and employee-related, human rights, anti-corruption and bribery matters, explaining not only their impacts but also risks associated with their activities. In addition, they would also have to describe their business models and diversity policies.

In total, it is anticipated that over 6000 companies would be affected. GRI is one of the frameworks referenced in the recital – the introductory part of the legislative proposal – and G4 covers all the topics in the proposal, from bribery to environmental measures.

Case Study from the Archive

Gulf Petrochemical Industries Company – Bahrain

Established in December 1979 as a joint venture between the Government of Bahrain, (SABIC) Saudi Arabia & (PIC) Kuwait, GPIC Bahrain utilizes natural gas as raw material and commenced production in 1985. Over the years, the company has developed key CSR programs that focus on areas such as environmental education and research and employee wellbeing. Sustainability is strongly embedded in the company's mission, which is "to add value to our customers and stakeholders by meeting their expectations whilst "Producing high quality petrochemicals, With a high level of emphasis on CSR, GPIC measures success through Profitability, Enhancing HSE (Healthy, Safety and Environment) and Social Responsibility.

Pillars of the CSR Model at GPIC

Socially Responsible Business/Investment

GPIC has also invested almost USD 2 bn in the national economy of Bahrain since its inception. This contribution has been made in several areas such as employment, training, procurement, dividends to the Government and most importantly in the form of natural gas / electricity consumed. Community involvement is embedded in the fabric of GPIC's business. In the past years, GPIC has trained 640 school and university graduates and provided material support to organizations caring for the young. The educational projects sponsored by GPIC carry significant prestige in the country as they support the Crown Prince's program for higher studies. To encourage good educational skills, GPIC also rewards best students from amongst the employees' children as well as children from neighboring schools and contributes to the employees' children's education.

Caring for the Environment

GPIC Bahrain is certified to the Environmental Management system ISO 14001 and implements strict waste management control.

Environmental Projects

To preserve local herbs that were once used for treatment by fore fathers , the Herbal Garden was officially opened on 9th May 2005. It was expanded later to include a rare arid plants garden with an overall area of more than 26,800m². Complementing these projects is the Green Oasis that contains all types of trees mostly donated by employees and others planted by dignitaries; raising the total number of trees in the complex to about 5400.

Awareness Programme

GPIC also believe that caring for the environment does not end at its door step. In 2004, GPIC launched its Environment Research Program – Environment Award for secondary school students, where it funds 20 research projects annually and rewards top three projects. The Environmental Awareness Program for schools is a part of GPIC initiative towards environment and the society.

Apart from this, the various GPIC complexes have been utilizing solar power for a number of its activities such as solar panels in the herbal garden, solar power for billboard lights, greenhouses, fish farm fans and solar water heating for showers.

Plant-Operation Projects

In 2007 the company announced about its wishes to construct an innovative project for Carbon Dioxide Recovery "CDR Project". This project, in fact, aims to cut down greenhouse gas emission and improve overall efficiency of the resources by generating additional Methanol and Urea products. It is being registered as the first Clean Development Mechanism (CDM) project in the Petrochemical/ Fertilizer Industry through the trading of Carbon Dioxide. The construction activities had been already initiated in July 2008. GPIC has standardized waste management procedures that allow it to reduce the ecological footprint from its core operations.

Treatment of Employees

At GPIC, employees are the most valuable assets. This is translated first and foremost in the strong relationship between Management and Labour Union. The two parties are cohesively bonded in working committees such as the Environment, Safety, Health committees. Employees' benefits include a saving scheme, health insurance covering all employees & their families, loans, indemnity, annual bonus, etc.

To participate in the decision making process, employees voice their views through the well established 40 committees and through the suggestion scheme. For the security of the employees, GPIC Bahrain has established a number of committees such as Management Labour Union High Council, Management Union Committee, SHE Committee, Safety Committee, Health Committee, Environment Committee, Saving Scheme, Omra Committee, Social Committee, Training, Development & Education Sponsorship Coordination Committee, Housing Loan Committee and Special Needs Cases Committee.

Conclusion

GPIC's CSR initiatives are indicative of the fact that the Company is an experienced player in Bahrain's economy and is aware of the country's pressing issues. GPIC's CSR strategies have also helped the company build a reputation as a strong employer that gives priority to the overall wellbeing of its staff. This is evident from its comprehensive policies and programs for employee benefits and welfare.
